Pathways Center

Many services to help prepare students in all areas

ERICA DYNES STAFF WRITER
erica.dynes@wartburg.edu

From your freshman to your senior year, the Pathways Center has many different services to help students prepare for all areas of their time at Wartburg College.

Derek Solheim, director of Pathways, said they can assist students in several different areas. These include academic and personal concerns, such as testing services and counseling, as well as professional areas such as career and internship searches.

"Part of it is looking at those three areas of your life and saying, what am I focusing on now?"

Solheim said first years will focus a lot on the academic area, just inding their way around campus and learning how to take notes.

Freshman who aren't really sure what they want to major in can find out what they want to do through taking a class, he said.

Solheim said Pathways can help students connect with a faculty member to further instruct them or to help students create their schedules.

Even though the services can be used year round, Solheim said he sees a peak in the fall and during certain times of the year with certain services, and often times they are interconnected.

"Someone may come in with a counseling concern, but it's really 'I don't know what I want to do with my life and I'm afraid to talk to my adviser.' That's the advantage of services like this is we can make immediate referrals," Solheim said.

One service Pathways has is the Writing, Reading, Speaking Lab (WRSL).

Jette Irgens, WRSL director, said they had about 1,500 appointments for the 2015-16 school year and usually sees appointments peak in the fall term.

"For a lot of first year students, they are still getting used to the transition from high school expectations," Irgens said.

"When you get to college the demands are different and it can be useful to have some extra assistance with making that transition."

Irgens said at the WRSL, trained writers will help students not only on proper grammar usage and spelling, but also about how to ask students questions and help empower them in their writing journey.

"I would like students to walk out of the writing lab feeling more secure as writers and to feel that writing is fun. It's a process of figuring out what you're thinking, not only how to put words on a piece of paper," she said.

Other services Pathways offers include:

Mentoring-partners students with a peer mentor for a year to challenge and nurture them throughout classes, time management and other study habits.

Supplemental Instruction (SI)-peer-led study sessions that are offered for some of the college's challenging courses and include content review and study strategies.

Counseling Services-assists students with personal, developmental and psychological concerns in a supportive and confidential space.

Career Services- Pathways professionals help students find their career path and build a network of alumni, connecting students to graduate school and employers

Disability Services- arranges accommodations for qualified individuals with disabilities.

Vocation- helps students explore the impact they want to have on the world through family, faith, community and their career.

Testing Services- provides proctor exams for students with disabilities, administers CLEP exams and provides graduate and professional school test preparation.

Math Lab- trained peer leaders offer one-on-one and group assistance for various math courses.

To find out how Pathways Center can help you, visit the third floor of the Vogel Library or go to http://www.wartburg.edu/pathways/ for more information.

Knowing how to be responsible on social media

MAYA WEATHERALL
KNIGHTLIFE EDITOR
maya.weatherall@wartburg.edu

As first-years start their academic year, keeping a clean social media profile is very important in keeping a good reputation in the Wartburg community.

"What I usually tell people is that social media is not private even if they have their privacy settings where they think it's private," Chris Knudson, director of creative strategy and lecturer in e-business, said.

"Anything that can be perceived as negative can have negative consequences in the future. Most employers now, when they are hiring, will look at social media profiles to see what types of things students are posting," he said.

Although most students have technology and have social media, they do not fully understand the impact it could have in their community.

"Many are very tech savvy, have their own social media presence, are already blogging and creating content," William Withers, journalism and communication professor, said.

"All that stuff is great, but I don't think many people fully understand the digital footprint that it leaves, not just in their first year, but is out there in cyberspace forever," Withers said.

Hannah Grimm said posting inappropriate things like violence and certain opinions could also affect your reputation on campus.

"Also keeping violence on your page down, it is something that is sometimes over looked because it is in our world every day, but when you're posting a lot of pictures of guns and gang symbols, it is not a good idea," Grimm said.

"With political issues you want to be careful. It is fine to post your ideas, but you have to remember that someone may not agree with you and you can't be harassing people on Facebook," she said.

"Having arguments on Facebook is one of the things that turns people off and makes people unfriend you. Make sure that you're not posting stuff that would make you lose a job one day.

"You've got to ask the question, 'if someone were to see this, would they give me a job?'" Grimm said.

Withers suggested the college should have an orientation that teaches first-years about being responsible with social media.

Withers also said the biggest virtual footprint was the app Yik Yak, an anonymous app that students can use to write posts without a name.

"That has had a really negative effect on our community at times this year," he said.

"Now let me juxtapose that, I am also so impressed with members of our community who have found the courage to rise up and speak against it.

"They have written op-ed pieces in the paper, they have spoken publicly about it and they have called people out for some of those posts," Withers said.

"I am more encouraged by the people who have the courage to do that, than the cowards who post some of those negative things on Yik Yak," he said.

Knudson said, "You shouldn't post anything online that you are not comfortable talking about with someone in person.

"It doesn't matter what topic you are talking about, there is more accountability when you have to talk to someone in person," he said.

Welcome from student senate

TYLER VOGEL
Student Body President
HANNAH CREED
Student Body Vice President

Welcome class of 2020!

As you begin your journey, here are a few cool insider details about Wartburg.

1. Head to Dr. Bechtel's classroom to play with the chinchillas and if you're brave, the boa constrictor.

2. Check out any of our incredible athletic teams.

3. Swing by a concert or recital in the music department. Christmas with Wartburg is an amazing show that was recently voted 13th best college Christmas festival in the nation.

4. Pick up some sweet treats at the Den. We recommend the milkshake or a cool cookie!

5. Join Dean Kittle for some one on one basketball or chat with President Colson.

6. Visit with your professors to learn more about Wartburg and their experiences. If you're feeling adventurous, meet someone outside of your major.

7. Join an organization. (We recommend Student Senate!) Wartburg offers an organization for everyone, and if you don't see one that suits your fancy, begin your own group by contacting campus programming.

Wartburg is an amazing community of people that will transform the years you spend here.

We encourage you to run for Student Senate for the chance to be elected by your classmates to make a difference on our campus.

Through Senate you will get to meet new people and work directly with administrators in making lasting changes for Wartburg and, of course, help with Outfly.

Senate is a great opportunity to get involved and let your concerns be heard.

Meetings are open to the entire student body each Thursday during community time.

Tyler Vogel and Hannah Creed will be serving as student body president and vice president this school year. They would like to welcome the new first-years to campus.—Submitted photo

Surviving the first year

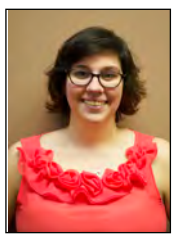
kaitlyn.williams@wartburg.edu

So you've survived high school and been accepted into college.



You've said goodbye to your family.

But now what?

Now you're a college student. Now it's time to prove that you belong here.

Through talking with my advisers and professors, I realized that many first-year students don't know what to expect from their first few weeks on campus.

Once you make it through orientation, it's time for your first real class. Here are some tips for your first day of classes.

1. Don't be late. It's the first day and it's bad form to be late. Scout out your classes beforehand so you know where you're going.

2. Come prepared. It's a myth that all you'll do on the first day is syllabi. Bring your notebook and pen to take notes.

3. Buy your books. Most classes actually use the books. If you're scared you won't, then don't open it until you get to class.

4. Know your professor's name and address them correctly. If they're a doctor then address them as so. Otherwise it's professor. Many professors may allow you to call them by their first name eventually.

5. Don't sit in the very back if there are seats available towards the front. It's not high school, you want to be in this class. Besides, it can be hard to see the board from the back.

6. Begin making friends on day one. These students may be in your major for the next four years, get to know them now. Students are the best study buddies.

7. Be engaged. Ask questions. Professors love to answer your questions and it's true; you probably aren't the only one with that question.

8. Get plenty of sleep. There's nothing worst than falling asleep in your first 7:45. Get plenty of sleep the night before.

9. Have pride in yourself. Nobody here cares that you're a first-year. Smile at people in the hallway or Mensa. Wartburg people really are Iowa nice.

10. Have fun. You chose Wartburg and your major and now it's time to have fun learning what you want to learn. Laugh at your professor's jokes and be amazed at all that you're learning. You're smart and you think your major is the best.

Everybody has tips for you. Ask your student orientation leader for more tips.

These students were hand picked because they are some of the most helpful students on campus and may become some of your first friends. Don't be afraid to ask what's on your mind.

I reached out and asked some of my fellow students what tips they have for you.

"Go to orientation. It's fun and you make a ton of friends." -Alex Gheysens.

"Don't assume you can survive on only three hours of sleep." -Lucas Wendland.

"You don't know everything about life and school. The quicker you learn that, the quicker you'll do well in college." -Eric Revis.

"If you need help find it. Don't get caught up with grades. Try super hard to get involved." -Domenic Boe.

"Set your goals and don't get too emotional when making life decisions." -Adeboye Olaniyan.

"Make a schedule and do your best to stick to it." -Mikayla Riley.

"Keep your door open the first few weeks to make friends." -Zack Nullmeyer.

"You will make a ton of friends in the first days, but don't limit yourself to just those. Reach out to get to know different people and upperclassmen." -MacKenzie Sellnau.

"Make friends with the security guards. They are great people." -Katie Hoobler.

"Define priorities, spend your time and money on said priorities and profit." -Dr. Christine DeVries.

"Take advantage of opporunities to talk with professors (even outside your major), don't freak out about your major, branch out of your comfort zone, college is what you make of it and have fun. Oh and go on a service trip." -Angela Zook.

"Don't worry. College is going to be great and you will survive and meet some of the best people."- Me.

RA programs connect students around campus

ELLYN FELTON EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
ellyn.felton@wartburg.edu

When attending college, being close to your Resident Assistant (RA) can be very helpful.

Wartburg College staffs 37 RAs to cover all of the residence halls on campus, Sarah Splinter, assistant director of Residence Life, said.

Splinter said they begin hiring RAs in the Winter Term. They look for someone who is passionate about Wartburg, helping others and who is approachable, she said.

The RAs are required to complete a certain number of programs. Splinter said some are formal, while others are very informal and not planned as much in advance.

"We also encourage them to do some community development activities. Those are more impromptu, hey let's go get ice cream, or let's eat dinner together or watch the game tonight, things like that," Splinter said.

The requirements for each RA vary depending on what building they are in, she said.

"For first year students, we like to encourage more structured programs. For upperclassmen, you'll see more of the stop and go type programs for getting free food or a break on campus," she said.

Cory Brannaman, an RA in Hebron, said RAs take time to create and tailor programs to their residents that will be beneficial.

"We wouldn't host them if we didn't think they were valuable," she added.

Brannaman said a few different events that went over well were a spring cleaning event, where he bought supplies for students to clean their rooms. He also gave out free dilly bars as an incentive.

Another one Brannaman enjoyed was a faith and conversation program. Brannaman ordered pizza and welcomed his floor to discuss faith, as well as to discuss what they thought was most valuable for them their first year at Wartburg.

Splinter said Residence Life encourages incoming students to attend the first event of the year. Unlike other years, they have made this event part of Orange EXCELeration.

"Attending that first event means they get to meet their RA if they haven't done so already and the rest of their floormates. It also helps them get involved right away with their RA programs," Splinter said.

She also said the RAs hold a floor program in September, to be sure students are keeping in contact with their RA.

"As a first year student, we know that those first six weeks are pretty important and really a time where they're transitioning and trying to find their fit here," Splinter added.

Splinter said students often participate at the beginning of the Fall Term, but as the semester gets busier students do not stay involved as much.

She said that could be due to people trying to meet new people at the beginning of the year as well.

One RA held a birthday party for her residents to celebrate their first birthdays away from home. (From left) Ashley Stevens, Elizabeth Johnson, Megan Newborough and Katie Kreis.—Submitted photo

They offer the programs throughout the year so when the weather may not be as good outside, students have something to do.

"It's a great chance to interact with other residents on the floor and continue to build relationships. Perhaps most importantly, believe it or not, RA programs are a lot of fun," Brannaman said.

Splinter said the better you know your RA, the more comfortable you are with approaching them, which is important in college.

"The easier it will be when you need something that's maybe not going so great and already have them as a resource. That's why we really encourage students to just meet them within that first week. That way when they do encounter a challenge, they already have that person they know they can go to," Splinter said.

Brannaman said getting to know and interact with his residents is his favorite part of his job as an RA.

"I hope that I made their experience a little more comfortable, a little safer and a little easier. I can't wait to continue my RA role [with a new group of residents]," Brannaman said.

Splinter said students should watch for advertisements for floor programs and stay in communication with their RA for what type of events they want to see next.

Splinter said participating in emails and surveys about events can also help.

Wartburg offers many different foods for students

KAITLYN WILLIAMS OP/ED EDITOR
kaitlyn.williams@wartburg.edu

One of the biggest things about going to college is campus food.

Will it be good? Will it be expensive? Will it be healthy?

Luckily, here at Wartburg, we have tons of options to fit every person and their diet.

However, some people don't know the hours of the different places on campus.

"My favorite part of dining services is working with a great group of adults and students and seeing how much they learn over the years. I also like providing healthy food for students," said Marty Johnson, assistant director of dining services.

MENSA

The Mensa is the cafeteria on campus.

It's literally the German translation of cafeteria. The best part is the Mensa is buffet style.

All you do is swipe your card that takes one meal off your meal plan and you can have all you want from the tons of choices provided.

There's always the daily hot dish and at least one thing on the grill. Then there's different pizzas, pastas and Asian foods.

Plus there's the salad bar and taco bar, as well as the different breads, bagels and cereals.

Every meal there's a different vegetarian option.

As for dessert, there's always a cake or bar item, as well as ice cream and various fruits.

If you're curious about what options will be in the Mensa for any meal, there is a calendar posted outside the Mensa as well as one online.

During finals week, the Mensa hosts midnight breakfast where you get food served by your professors for free from 11:00 p.m. to midnight.

DEN

The Den is like an on-campus restaurant located in the student center. Meal plan points are used at the Den.

As for food choices, there is a variety of hot options like burgers and calzones. However, there are also general grocery options like EasyMac and pizza rolls. Students also really like the Avalanches there which is like a Blizzard.

Meal transfers are also available to the Den.

"I like the Den because they have a wide variety of teas," said Mikayla Riley. Riley is a student that also works in dining services.

KONDITOREI

The Konditorei, or K-dit, is a popular meeting place on campus due to its coffee-house atmosphere and location in the library.

Points can be used here for students.

The K-dit is mostly known for a variety of drink choices- both caffeinated and not.

They also have salads and wraps for food items.

Meal transfers are also available to the K-dit.

ZESTY ORANGE

The Zesty Orange is often just called The Zesty and is located in "The W."

Points can be used here.

The Zesty has a little bit of everything from salads and wraps to warm food.

Many students go to The Zesty for their fresh fruit and yogurt smoothies.

MEAL TRANSFERS

Meal transfers are made online through GET food and can be made to either the Den or the K-dit. It substitutes one meal for whatever you order.

After signing up for GET food, transfers can be made at any time for the location's meal transfer hours, then picked up at the location at the designated time.

Students are able to order hot meals, as well as grab-and-gos.

In a grab-and-go meal transfer, students are able to pick up food to take back to their rooms to heat up later.

New year, new Wartburg coaches

RILEY COLE SPORTS EDITOR
riley.cole@wartburg.edu

New sports seasons bring new opportunities for success, new athletes and new competition. But this fall season, it also brings new faces to coach women's golf, cross country and tennis.

Replacing Mike Strydom, Monica Severson and Steve Johnson are Chris Gustas, Greg Bodensteiner and Ryan Chapman respectively.

In his short time as a Knight Gustas has been thinking about what he wants his practices to look like once the women's tennis team begins practice.

Chris Gustas

"With such an open line-up and me not seeing most of these girls hit a tennis ball before, a lot of my goals, like when I have been writing things down and planning practices and everything, have not been focusing so much on results but just focusing on what we can do to make ourselves better," Gustas said.

This year's women's tennis team returns just three players from last year's team: Allison Birnbaum, Alex Petersen and Alexa Schmitz.

The women's tennis team starts their fall season on Friday, September 9 against Iowa Conference foe Central at 4 p.m. on their home court.

Another new coach at Wartburg is Greg Bodensteiner, who is leading the nine-time defending Iowa Conference champion women's golf team.

Greg Bodensteiner

"Golf has always been my passion," Bodensteiner said.

Bodensteiner is following in the footsteps of Monica Severson who coached the women's golf team to nine consecutive Iowa Conference team titles.

He will also be coaching three-time defending Iowa Conference individual championRochelle Beardsley.

That success is one thing that Bodensteiner hopes to build off of during his time as head coach.

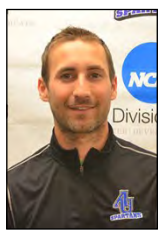
"The fact that the program is really successful made it, to me, a little bit more inviting, just knowing that you were walking into a good situation, and you didn't have to start from the ground level.

"Obviously, the expectations are there," Bodensteiner said.

This year's women's golf team will be led by Beardsley and Brooke Klostermann. In the individual competition, Beardsley and Klostermann finished first and second in the Iowa Conference tournament respectively.

The Knights will start their season at the Sail Classic in Cedar Falls on Sept. 2 and 3.

As for Wartburg Cross Country program, Ryan Chapman will be replacing Steve Johnson as head coach.



Ryan Chapman

"In bigger news for me, I'm taking over a very storied program. The last time this position was open, I was watching Saturday morning cartoons," Chapman said.

Chapman said he is thankful for the opportunity to fill such a special role in the Wartburg Cross Country program.

"This is a different program altogether," Chapman said.

"There are not too many programs in NCAA DIII that have had this many All-Americans in the last 20 years. Not too many programs have this sort of success. In many senses, this is the destination for distance running in NCAA Division III," Chapman said.

The women's cross country team is set to be led by their senior class in Gillian Feller, Kelsey Miner, Jaclyn Rittgers and Dakota Tell.

As for the men's cross country team, it will be JJ Frawley, Eli Kaczinski and Kailas Kokare leading the team.

Chapman is impressed with the leadership he has seen in both teams this early in the season, particularly within the men's team.

"The men's team, if there is such a thing, has too much leadership," Chapman said.

Both teams begin their season at Augsburg on Saturday, Sept. 3.

Wartburg's new era

TYLER FRENCH STAFF WRITER
tyler.french@wartburg.edu

For most teams around the country, coming into the season ranked just outside the Top 25 would be a great thing, but for the Wartburg Knights, it's a little bit surprising.

This is a team that has won two IIAC titles in the last three and has won 21 of their last 23 games. This is a also a team, however, that graduated a record 31 seniors a year ago, including many All-Conference players such as two-time IIAC MVP quarterback Logan Schrader.

It is a new year and a new era for Wartburg football though and head coach Rick Willis is very optimistic.

"We believe we have a hardworking group of hungry guys that reported in good shape and are excited for their opportunity," Willis said.

The Knights return five starters on both sides of the ball, and Willis said there will be a lot of new faces.

Offensively, Wartburg will be led by a new quarterback, sophomore Matt Sacia, as well as returning skill position players: wide receiver Riley Brockway, and running backs Jake Haberman and Parker Hammel.

Haberman, a senior captain this season, said the team is ready to get the season started.

"As a freshman and sophomore we won the IIAC, it was definitely a weird feeling last year going 9-1 and not being able to play in the postseason," Haberman said, "definitely using that as motivation."

On the defensive side, the Knights will be anchored by senior linebacker Rob Rottler, who is entering his second year as a starter.

While they only return four other starters, Rottler says that the team has a lot of good athletes who see the field well.

Wartburg is picked to finish first in the Iowa Conference, sharing that distinction with the defending champion Dubuque Spartans.

The Knights open their season Sept. 10 on the road at Monmouth College.

Volleyball finds 'new team' for 2016

RILEY COLE SPORTS EDITOR
riley.cole@wartburg.edu

The Wartburg volleyball team is coming off a trip to the NCAA Tournament, but this season, the Knights will have to make adjustments after losing several players to graduation.

The volleyball team will try and fill in the roles of former setter Emma Harmeyer, defensive specialist Jamie Farley, plus hitters Kaity Brouwer, Crystal Graves, Libby Creery, Kalyn Ertz and Casey Pestka.

Current player, Claire Willenbring, is excited for the challenge of filling in the roles of those players who graduated.

"I'm looking forward to a brand new team," Willenbring said. "We lost a lot of seniors last year, so it is kind of a whole new group this year."

Co-head coach Jennifer Walker is optimistic heading into the season, despite losing most of the starters from a year ago.

"I'm actually feeling really good about our athletes," Walker said. "We have some tweaks here and there, as far as injuries. For the most part, we are doing great."

Aryn Jones, coming off a stellar year in the NCAA Tournament with the volleyball team and then competing in the Final Four in the women's basketball team, said the team has the NCAA tournament on their minds again this season.

"That is what you work for every year-to get to that point and exceed your expectations from last year," Jones said. "We are just practicing and building off of our new team and knowing that our new team is going to achieve new things."

The team will open their season at the Bethel Invitational on September 2 and 3 in St. Paul, Minnesota.

"We open our season against some tough competition," Walker said. "That'll be a good challenge for us as we head into the 2016 season."
